"Customers of AOL don't realize it, but they're using a "portal" when they go online. A portal provides a "home" - a place to get news, stock prices, or whatever else interests you. A "corporate portal" is the same concept - but it's for the employees of a business. It provides them with a single point of entry into all the information their company's systems contain. Through one user-friendly interface, employees can send e-mail, schedule meetings, check inventory, fill out forms, request sales reports - and on and on! Enterprise portal technology is a breakthrough! "Corporate Portals" explains what the technology is, supplies an analysis of its tremendous benefits, and explains how to design and propose a corporate portal solution to decision-makers. Benefits include: ability to customize the portal design to individuals' needs; powerful search and navigation capabilities, with direct access to reports, analyses, and what-if scenarios across multiple systems and applications; and, knowledge sharing - immediate ability to connect with subject experts and team members, or to post findings and research for anyone who needs it, and more".
