This book focuses on the current Muslim mood in India, particularly that of the youth who are trying to move the community into a new—more positive—direction. Despite a marked increase in religiosity and an assertion of Muslim identity, young Muslims are more secular and forward-looking than the older generation. They also have a strong sense of belonging to India, and see no contradiction between being proud Indians and proud Muslims at the same time.

Keen to draw a line under the past, they are harbingers of India's equivalent of 'Muslim spring'.
